Julia Marciari-Alexander has served as Executive Director & CEO of the Walters Art Museum since 2013. The fifth director of the Walters Art Museum, she is the first woman to hold the post. Early in her tenure, she oversaw the completion of a $30 million endowment campaign, resulting in her position being named the Andrea B. and John H. Laporte Director. Simultaneously, she led the Board, staff, and community stakeholders in a comprehensive strategic thinking process that led to a major restructuring of the organization, the hiring of a dynamic team of senior leaders, and the creation of four strategic partnerships with anchor institutions in the Baltimore region: Morgan State University, University of Maryland Baltimore County, the Kennedy Krieger Institute, and the

Mentors

Maryland Institute College of Art. These ongoing partnerships focus on leveraging the resources and talent in Baltimore and the region to drive creativity and sustainability in the local and regional arts economy and, more broadly, to impact the cultural sector and museum field nationally and internationally. More recently, she has sharpened her focus on how to use the Walters collections, its buildings, and its people to build a better city. She is consequently engaging Board, staff, and community stakeholders on a larger, multi-year project to renovate and reprogram the 5 buildings comprising the museum's campus, which has included the successful completion of a $10.6 million dollar capital campaign to restore and repurpose the first of the five historic buildings. She is inspired by the collaborative work that she and the team at the museum do to create exhibitions and public and educational programs that connect with and inspire the wide-ranging and diverse communities the Walters serves in the 21st century.

She came to The Walters from the San Diego Museum of Art (SDMA) where she served from 2008 to 2013 as the Deputy Director for Curatorial Affairs as well as periods in which she held the positions of Interim Co-Director (2009-2010) and Interim Deputy Director for Education (2010-2011).
